Scott Ross is an associate in Herrick's Litigation Department, where he focuses on litigating commercial, real estate and business disputes in state and federal court, as well as alternative dispute resolution forums. Scott has significant experience representing prominent real estate developers, hotel owners, business executives, professional sports teams and their executives, financial services and technology companies, and international banking and lending institutions in the prosecution and defense of high-stakes contract and business tort claims.

Before attending law school, Scott studied economics as an undergraduate at Penn State University and worked for nearly three years as a broker and analyst in the weather derivatives industry. As a commercial litigator, Scott leverages his business background to gain a unique perspective and understanding of a clients' business and industry.

Scott graduated cum laude from St. John's University School of Law, where he was the associate managing editor of the St. John's Law Review. During law school, he served as a judicial intern for the Honorable Arthur D. Spatt of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York.
